Hospital starts new service

Do you remember the last time you had surgery? You probably went to the hospital a day early for a series of tests before the operation. You also paid for the night in the hospital.

On April 2, Lynchburg General Hospital began a new service which will relieve patients of that extra day in the hospital and will save them the charge for that day.

Most surgical patients may now be admitted the day of their surgery and their operation will be scheduled later in the day. All testing will be done on an out-patient basis prior to surgery.

According to Richard H. Gilmore, hospital senior vice president, "We have instituted this policy to make a hospital stay more convenient for out patients and more important, to save our patients money.

"While this service is not available to all patients, a great majority will find it more convenient and less expensive," he added.

When Christ entered the city

By WILLIAM L. TRIMYER
CHRIST ENTERS THE CITY
Lesson for April 8, 1984
Bible Study Passages: Mark 11:8-10, 15-19, 27-33

INTRODUCTION

Confrontation, conflict, anger, aggressiveness, hostilities, tension, and anxiety. These are words that carry a lot of emotional impact for us. We generally seek to avoid conflict and confrontation because it takes so much of our energy. We may lose something if we come out into the open with our feelings. Some couples avoid each other for years by playing it safe and keeping their distance. Avoidance is the mechanics we use most often in dealing with confrontation.

We can learn from the example Jesus set before us in the way he handled conflict. He met it headon in order to move beyond the conflict to complete his purpose or to minister to someone. Jesus did not involve himself in conflict because he liked it or because he was looking for it. He knew how important it is to resolve conflicts in order for people to grow.

This week's lesson looks at Jesus' entry into the city and the challenge he met to his authority. We will note how Jesus deals with his critics and outwardly expressed his anger in the temple.

CORONATION FOR A KING (Mark 11:1-11)

When Jesus entered Jerusalem, he did not come in a chariot drawn by two steeds; he came riding upon an unsaddled donkey. He entered the city during the season of Passover, a celebration depicting the Hebrew's deliverence from Egyptian slavery. Thus, the people were naturally excited over the season of feasting, so the sight of Jesus entering the city amid his admiring disciples and supporters only added to their festive occasion.

The people who lined the streets received Jesus as a political hero, shouting "Hosanna" as he strode along. They looked to Jesus as a deliverer from oppression and aggression of the Romans. He would soon reveal his destiny to die for the sins of humanity.

JESUS CLEANSES THE TEMPLE (Mark 11:15-19)

Some have trouble believing that Jesus ever expressed anger, but his cleansing of the temple reveals his stern protest against those who sold and bought in the temple. When Jesus entered the temple he did not simply ask the buyers and sellers to leave; he whipped their backsides and threw them out. He was angry that the keepers of the temple took advantage of those who came to worship.

The church must always take care not to take advantage of people who come seeking worship. The electronic church sometimes spends more air time selling than proclaiming the good news of God's grace in Jesus Christ.

JESUS CONFRONTS THE OPPOSITION (Mark 11:27-33)

Jesus faced opposition throughout his life. The opposition came from family, followers, and religious officials. He never lived with any sense of peace of mind except that he was following the will of his heavenly father. He received more hostile responses than positive responses.

At every turn Jesus confronted tradition with his sense of divine authority. The temple rulers tried their best to entrap Jesus by asking him by what authority he acted. Jesus countered their question with a question of his own regarding John the Baptizer. The religious rulers were silenced by his question, for the answer the question would mean having to go against the people's sentiment for John.

Readers and class members may ponder the following questions or suggestions:

•What comes to mind when you hear the word conflict?

•Can you identify other biblical references where Jesus expressed anger?

•Perhaps there is tension between you and another person.

Decide how you will resolve the conflict.
